

OPENING UP TO GLOBALIZATION-AN INDIAN LEGAL SYSTEM PROSPECTIVE

Mr. Rajesh Karanjkar*

India is different and distinct from the profession practiced elsewhere in the world. It is more litigation-oriented as is evident from the fact that out of nearly 1.2 million lawyers in India (largest in the world) more than 1 million are litigation lawyers, practicing mainly in district courts all over India. It is unlikely that these lawyers would be adversely affected if international law firms were allowed entry into India.

The Indian Advocate is today more worried about the internal competition and establishing himself in the Indian legal Arena. More ever the fierce internal competition that an Indian firm faces enables it to become a success and face the challenges of global markets. Today's advocates are not worried about taking the international challenges due to the spread of awareness and information technology.

In fact by the tools he has and the legacy of the Indian legal system it is possible for him to change the virtues of the Global facet of legal arena. Earlier it was the European Judicial system that the world used to follow and give references of, but today it is the Indian Judiciary which is been observed and referred to by the world. Due to competent legislature and the mature legal system in India it is possible for the Indian lawyer to understand the basic legal arena of any country or state weather federal, democratic, republic presidential, parliamentary, dictatorial, communist type.

Due to the inclusion of various types of laws present in the Indian Judiciary system an Indian lawyer can easily navigate through different legal systems of the world and come out to be a winner in understanding much of the problems faced by the world. It has been proven from time to time that the Indian culture has been the inclusive culture which digests different cultural traits and makes them suitable with its own system rather it gets itself metamorphosed according to the latest traditions and traits. This gives us a brief idea that how the judiciary system in India may have evolved over the decades to what makes it today.

Whatever criticism may have been made on the Indian judiciary system, in India if we compare the number of years that India has become democratic republic and the time required for Indian Judiciary system to percolate the real meaning of justice to the society it is fantastic as compared to the other younger nations of same age. This brings Indian judiciary system amongst the topmost nations in pace that can be followed by the upcoming nations of tomorrow and be an example to follow: a system which is just, able and trustworthy.

The tremendous potential that Indian Law brains have could be bought to gather the ideas and thought process to solve the most complicated problems of the world. Here i dare to say that the Indian brains are amongst the best brains in world and if utilized in a constructive way have the virtues to solve the problems of world. As proven from time to time the Indians in USA and UK are the heads of many multinational Companies and also the strategic heads of leading nations in world.

Annually 20 billion USD are traded through the legal services if India would only get a chunk of it there would not be a need for it to grasp for the deficit every year it faces. In fact by the means of LPOs it has started generating revenues. Even the best IT companies in world are coming up with Legal based revenue generation models and they are only waiting for Indian markets to open up as they know that the best brains that are generated by the Indian education systems can be utilized for solving the complicated legal problems of world order.

The international treaties such as GATT and WTO treaties which are been signed today by India are shaping up the future of the Indian system and tomorrow these virtues of India will change the world order from "look west" to "Go eastern". Looking at the tremendous constitution and wisdom that has been gained by the Indian Judiciary and the experience that has been created by the cases fought along, the world order cannot just ignore the Indian Judiciary system neither can it abolish the impact it will have on the world once the doors of the globalization are opened.

So why does the Indian Young lawyer have to worry about the ability of his to put forth his foot and mark his footprint on the international front? What is it that is really worrisome in getting the wisdom of the world coming to the Indian judiciary? These are the questions which only time will decide and answer. At this point it could be only said that the process of globalization which was started in the 90s is unstoppable now and Indian systems whether it is Judiciary, bureaucracy or for that matter the way in which government acts has to change. The current waves of globalization that are striking the borders of the Judiciary will engulf the system to change for the betterment and India will once again emerge as a destination of knowledge centre as it has been proven by the software revolution that occurred in India Not just a decade ago.
